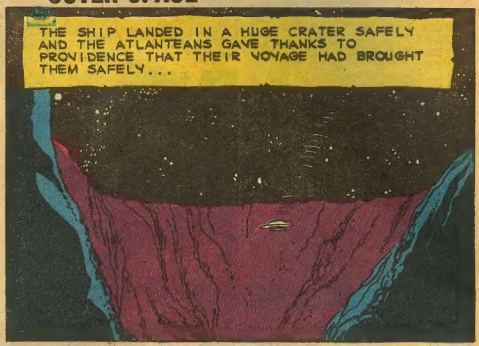
OFF TO THE MOON SPED THE SPACESHIP WHILE ATLANTIS SANK FOREVER BENEATH THE WAVES!

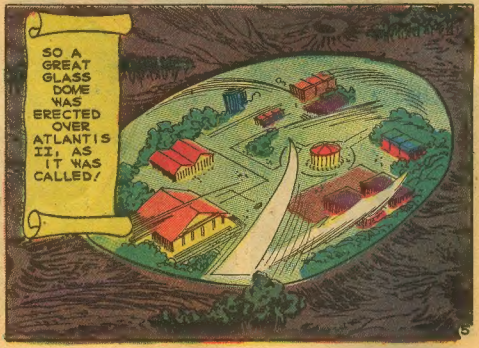
THE MOON, 50,000 YEARS AGO HAD A GOOD ATMOSPHERE, AND PLANT LIFE FLOURISHED ALL OVER THE CRATER SURFACES...



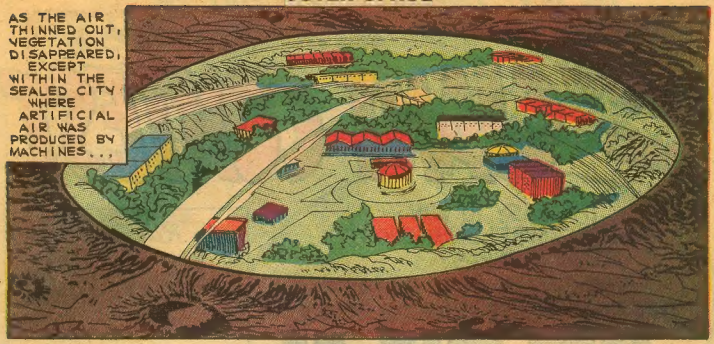
THE SHIP LANDED IN A HUGE CRATER SAFELY AND THE ATLANTEANS GAVE THANKS TO PROVIDENCE THAT THEIR VOYAGE HAD BROUGHT THEM SAFELY...

AS TIME WENT ON, XELOX AND OTHER GREAT LEADERS AROSE TO CONTINUE THEIR PLACID EXISTENCE WHICH GAVE THEM GREAT STRIDES IN THE ARTS AND SCIENCES!

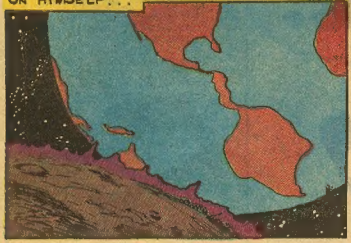
EONS LATER, SCIENTISTS NOTED THAT THE AIR OF THE MOON WAS THINNING!



AS THE AIR THINNED OUT, VEGETATION DISAPPEARED, EXCEPT WITHIN THE SEALED CITY WHERE ARTIFICIAL AIR WAS PRODUCED BY MACHINES...



NEVER HAD THE ATLANTEANS JOURNEYED BACK TO EARTH TO LEARN HOW LIFE FARED THERE...NEVER DID THEY LEARN OF THE GLACIER AGES...THE RECURRING PERIODS OF AGES OF ENLIGHTENMENT AND DARKNESS THAT MAN BROUGHT ON HIMSELF...



SO IT WAS IN 1961 A.D., THAT THE FIRST MANNED SHIP IN MODERN TIMES WAS TO COME WITHIN VIEW OF ATLANTIS II/

SOLUTION IN SPACE

Stephen Whitestone, president of the Food Council of the Universe, had called a special meeting of the member countries in Washington. The news he had to present to the members was most alarming.

"Our scientists have produced a very healthy population during the past half century. We have conquered the various diseases and illnesses that baffled mankind a century ago. As a result of reducing the death rate during infancy and also prolonging the life span of people, we have a very large population that must be fed. We have been using every bit of spare earth to raise food. In addition, we have developed hydroponics to a very definite science. We can cultivate plants by feeding them solutions of the proper chemicals. But in spite of all our efforts, we will run short of food at the end of the present year."

There was silence in the great hall when Mr. Whitestone had finished speaking. But there was no air of panic. You could sense the feeling that something would be done to meet the situation. Roger Groveland, representative of Great Britain, arose from his seat and spoke.

"Mr. President, and honored members, I have this to say. We knew that sooner or later such a situation would arise. I am therefore authorized to say my government will place at the disposal of the Food Council whatever funds may be necessary to undertake anything necessary to produce the needed food for people."

Everyone applauded this statement. Other members then arose and also offered the needed money to carry on any kind of research. Mr. Whitestone then introduced Professor John Horton who had something to say about the subject. He was a middle-aged man with a most friendly smile.

"We know how to raise food. That is no longer our problem. What we need is a greater area so that we may have more food. And such an area is available. I refer, of course, to the Moon. It is completely uninhabited. We have three patrol stations located on the dark side of the Moon. We can use most of the Moon's area to cultivate food. How are the chemicals to be obtained? From the Moon's own rocks. Preliminary results in our own laboratory show definitely that these rocks do have most of the needed chemicals. Water will be scarce. Moon Patrol number one reports that there is water in the form of ice in the deep crevices. We will have to melt this ice to obtain the needed water. However the necessary atmosphere would have to be created.

Our lunar farm will have to be a large transparent air-conditioned dome which will admit the necessary light. Beneath the dome we will grow bumper crops. Because of gravitational pull, gravity-sap will almost stream up into foliage and fruit. Hence we will have gigantic cabbages, carrots, and apples.

The farmers on this planet of ours have always been a patient lot. They toil and sweat for weeks and even months, before a single crop can be harvested. But on the moon things will be different since crops would grow with astonishing rapidity. Because of the Moon's period of rotation vegetables would be ready for harvesting in two weeks. However, a lunar worker would have to carry a tank of oxygen on his back and breathe through a mask if he wasn't working inside a dome farm. When the food is harvested it can be sent back to earth in a space missle. Within a period of three months after landing on the Moon, we should have our first harvest."

There was a period of discussion over the plan and finally it was agreed that the first group of scientists and workers should leave Earth in a month. Professor John Horton signified his readiness to take charge of matters.

"We will provide the necessary spaceship," said the representative of the United States. "And under such able leadership we know that the plan will succeed."

During the month, the Professor was busy assembling the men to go with him as well as the materials. A combination freighter and passenger spaceship, The Dolemnius, was reconditioned and put at the disposal of the group. And on February 17, 2045, the ship was almost ready to leave Earthport. All except one man had reported aboard the spaceship.

"Captain Edward Pierson was suddenly taken ill," said Mr. Whitestone. "He is your oxygen man. Without him you can't get a certificate to leave Earth. Now what are we going to do?"

William Simpson, the chemical expert, had a suggestion to make. He pointed to a well built man who was one of the guests in the briefing and assembly room. For the leaders of the expedition had at once returned to the briefing and assembly room to discuss the matter.

"Robert Marson is a well known sportsman. He also holds a license as an oxygen man. He owns his own spaceship and likes to fly into outer space. Surely, if we tell him about the emergency, he would help."

The situation was explained to the sportsman who understood the seriousness of the matter.

"Of course I'll go with you," he replied. "But just one favor. I want to take my fishing equipment with me. Who knows? Maybe there are some new variety of fish on the moon. In an hour I'll have my stuff and be aboard your spaceship."

The schedule was delayed exactly one hour and The Dolemnius, under the command of Major Alexander Birkos, left for her destination, the Moon. The ship was hoisted onto the launching platform and then hurled into outer space. The voyage was pleasant and nothing unexpected happened. Patrol station, number two, on the Moon, was the exact destination. Captain Roy Lisner, in charge of that patrol station, had been notified about the coming of the spaceship. And also its purpose.

"So they are going to try to raise vegetables and fruits on the Moon," he remarked to one of his men. "The rock surface is so tough you can't even go through it with a diamond drill."

The spaceship landed and the men soon started on their assigned tasks. Under the law, oxygen tanks had to be replenished once every day from a main feeder tank. That gave Robert Marson sufficient time to do some exploration and also look for a fishing spot. The workers assembled a large dome. Then under it they built trays. Into these trays were poured a combination of chemicals obtained from the rocks on the Moon. Then the necessary seeds were dropped into the solution. At the end of two weeks the first crop was ready to be harvested. But something had gone wrong.

"Instead of obtaining gigantic vegetables and fruits, we are getting the exact reverse," sighed Professor John Horton. "I guess you can say we have miniature vegetables and fruits. It will take some long patient research to find out what happened. However, we should be thankful we have had this measure of success. With a harvest every two weeks, we will be able to feed the increasing Earth population."

Robert Marson volunteered to take charge of sending back the first food in a space missle. The men from the patrol station helped him pack the food. And the missle soon was on its way back home. The members of the expedition took a break until they would receive their next instructions from Earth.

"They may tell us to call the entire thing off, suggested one of the men. "When you expect something big and get it small, you sort of feel upset."

The official message came via the patrol station Captain Roy Lisner delivered it in person to Professor Horton who hesitated and then opened the envelope. His eyes almost popped out of his head as he called together the members of the expedition

"Let me read this message to you," he said with joy in his voice.

"The Food Council of the Universe sends its congratulations to the members of the first expedition to raise food on the Moon. The vegetables and fruits were gigantic. We never imagined they could be so large. The problem is solved! We also appreciate the kindness of Mr. Marson in sending us several cases of fish he caught. They were enjoyable and well iced and hence preserved."

Professor Horton went up right to Mr. Marson He was about to say something when the sportsman spoke first.

"Hope you aren't angry because I sent some fish I caught back to Earth?"

"A million thanks," replied the Professor. "You saved the day for us. The vegetables and fruits were small because we didn't have the right water ratio. The evaporation of water from the ice around your fish made the vegetables and fruits swell up. Again, a million thanks to a good sportsman and fisherman who showed us how to raise gigantic vegetables and fruits."

MARS APPEARED TO BE A DESERT REGION WITH CLUSTERS OF ALGAE-TYPE FORESTS HERE AND THERE...
LET'S LAND IN ONE OF THOSE CLUMPS TO CONCEAL OUR SHIP/
AFTER THEY LANDED THEY WERE SURPRISED TO SEE THE RUINS OF A SMALL TOWN/
A GHOST TOWN/ MAYBE THERE ISN'T ANY LIFE NOW/
SUDDENLY AN OLD MARTIAN CAME OUT OF A CAVE AND COMMUNICATED WITH THEM BY TELEPATHY/
YOU ARE FROM ANOTHER WORLD? GREETINGS/
A MAN/ HE LOOKS LIKE US/
THE EARTHMEN SOON RECOVERED THEIR WITS, AND THE OLD MAN EXPLAINED ABOUT THE ROBOTS THEY HAD SEEN...

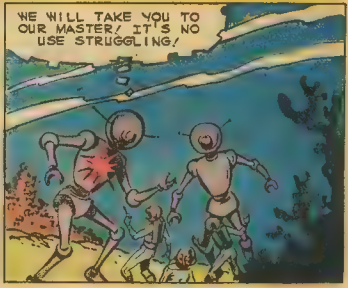
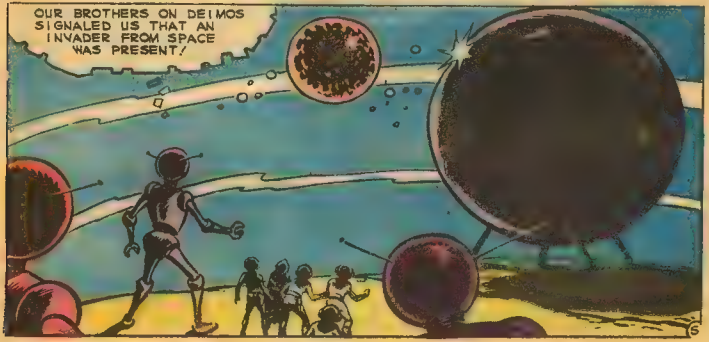
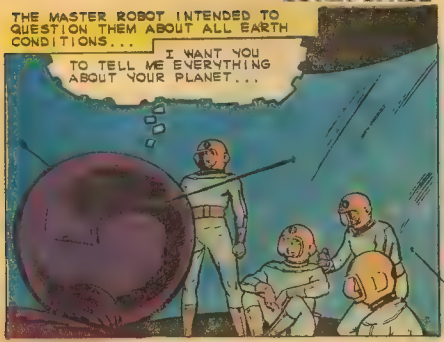
WE WILL TAKE YOU TO OUR MASTER/ IT'S NO USE STRUGGLING/



OUR BROTHERS ON DEIMOS SIGNALED US THAT AN INVADER FROM SPACE WAS PRESENT/





THE MASTER ROBOT INTENDED TO QUESTION THEM ABOUT ALL EARTH CONDITIONS...
I WANT YOU TO TELL ME EVERYTHING ABOUT YOUR PLANET...

WHILE THE MASTER ROBOT QUESTIONED THEM FOR DAYS AND WEEKS, CAPTAIN MORENO FOUND TIME TO CONTINUE HIS RADIO MESSAGES TO EARTH!
